Wit doth not consist so much in advancing things new, as in giving things known an agreeable turn. Addison's Spect.
Before I made this remark, I wondered to see the Roman poets, in their description of a beautiful man, so often mention the turn of his neck and arms. Addison.
A young man of a sprightly turn in conversation, had an inordinate desire of appearing fashionable. Spektator.
Books give the same turn to our thoughts and reasoning, that good company does to our conversation. Swift's Misc.
The very turn of voice, the good pronunciation, and the alluring manner which some teachers have attained, will engage the attention. Watts.

14. The manner of adjusting the words of a sentence. The turn of words, in which Ovid excels all poets, are sometimes a fault or sometimes a beauty, as they are used properly or improperly. Dryden.
The three first stanzas are rendered word for word with the original, not only with the same elegance, but the same short turn of expression peculiar to the sapphic ode. Addison.
The first coin being made of brass gave the denomination to money among the Romans, and the whole turn of their expressions is derived from it. Arbutnot.

15. By TURNS. One after another. They feel by turns the bitter change Of fierce extremes; extremes by change more fierce. Mil.
The challenge to Dametas shall belong, Menalcas shall sustain his under-song; Each in his turn your tuneful numbers bring; By turns the tuneful muses love to sing. Dryden's Virg.
By turns put on the suppliant, and the lord; Threaten'd this moment, and the next implor'd. Prior.

TURBIDITY. n. f. [turn and bench.] A term of turners. Small work in metal is turn'd in an iron lathe called a turbidity, which they screw in a vice, and having fitted their work upon a small iron axle, with a drill barrel, fitted upon a square flange, at the end of the axis, next the left-hand, they with a drill-bow, and drill-string, carry it about. Moxon.

TURBOAT. n. f. [turn and boat.] One who forsakes his party or principles; a renegade; Courtely itself must turn to disdain, if you come in her preference—Then is courtely a turboat. Shakespeare.

TURNER. n. f. [from turn.] One whose trade is to turn in a lathe. Nor box, nor limes without their use are made, Smooth-grain'd and proper for the turner's trade. Dryden.
Some turners, to shew their dexterity in turning, turn long and slender pieces of ivory, as small as an hay-stalk. Moxon.

TURNING. v. a. [from turn.] Flexure; winding; meander. I ran with headlong haste Thro' paths and turnings often trod by day. Milton.

TURNINGNESS. n. f. [from turn.] Quality of turning; tergiversation; tergiversation. So nature formed him, to all turnings of sleights; that though no man had less goodness, no man could better find the places whence arguments might grow of goodness. Sid.

TURPIN. n. f. A white eulent root. The flower consists of four leaves, which are placed in form of a cross; out of the flower cup rises the pointal, which afterward turns to a pod, divided into two cells by an intermediate partition, to which the valves adhere on both sides, and are full of roundish seeds: a carnosous and tuberoso root. Mil.
November is drawn with bunches of parsnips and turnips in his right-hand. Peacham on Drawing.
